William T. Webb, formerly of DeLand, but who is now located in St. Louis, sends THE NEWS a lengthy newspaper clipping about Oklahoma's young men. In the article we find the following: "Another Missouri youth of 35 who has made his impress on the new State is Senator Menefee, of Carnegie, down in Caddo county, close to the big Comanche and Kiowa Pasture, just sold. Senator Menefee comes from Chillicothe, Mo., where he has many relatives. When he moved down here he went to a town called Antler, but the Post-Office Department at Washington one day learned that there was already an Antler down in that part of the country, so it up and changed, without a moment's warning, the name of Menefee's town to that of the great Scotch philanthropist. Menefee told me the other day that he would wait a few more weeks for Mr. Carnegie to make an offer of a library to the only town in the Southwest that bears his name, but not longer. He feels, with some serious reason, that Mr. Carnegie should place a library in Carnegie without the asking. This young man Menefee is interested in several banks and is the president of one. He is a candidate for the trusteeship of the new State as a Democrat, and says that as a banker and an experienced accountant he is fitted for the place. He is a good example of the young man of affairs in Oklahoma."

Commenting on Miss Stubbs' appointment a leading Indiana newspaper says, "If she is competent to fill an office in the gift of the people, why is she not competent to vote for a person to fill the place?"
